Complaints about employees go to HR first, and then Joe pulls me in if needed. Unless there's a reason to bring Law in earlier, I'm fine with that set up. Joe, let me know how you want to proceed.

Subject: Citizen complaint

Hi Joe and Vanessa,
On Friday, Jaime Fuge (Chief Inspector for Central Count) and I took a citizen complaint about an employee.

The citizen was an observer at Central Count and had a bad interaction with Amaad Rivera. They wanted to make sure the city heard their side of the story as they were afraid it was going to come back to them.

I have lots of details from the call from Matt Roeser. High level, they stated the Amaad was very intimidating to his wife, very boisterous, dramatic, rude, unprofessional and threatening when they came back roughly 2:00 am to central count to get results. The Mayor was nearby and they were surprised that he didn't step in.

They wanted us to hear the story in case there is a pattern with this employee as they had heard that he had a confrontation with someone else earlier.

Not sure what the next step is. Matt and his wife are not looking to make a big deal out of this. They said they got to their car early Wednesday am and were really uncomfortable with the interaction that they had had.

This incident didn't involve police in any way, an additional incident from Election night.

Please let me know what you would recommend I do with this information.

Thank you,

Diana Ellenbecker
